

Aurora as Seen in Boston.

Los Angeles Times (1886-Current File); Mar 22, 1918; ProQuest Historical Newspapers Los Angeles Times (1881 - 1985)

pg. 117

Aurora as Seen in Boston.

One of the most brilliant displays of Aurora Borealis seen in Boston in many years occurred last evening. The display exhibited all the colors of the rainbow. At times the entire heavens were filled with kaleidoscopic light, and the eastern and southern skies were as brightly illuminated as was the north.

There were moments when the strongest effects were above one's head, and they whirled in eddies of color, or in arcs resembling the varicolored effects of a certain kind of top that is popular as a toy. Often the effect was like a luminous fan, but no effect lasted more than a few seconds. When the red glow was most intense it cast a pinkish hue over the snow —
Boston Transcript.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.